Innovation and Mass Timber: The Case for Tall Wood Buildings

Tracey MacTavish

Associate with McFarlane Green + Biggar ARCHITECTURE + DESIGN

Tracey Mactavish is an Associate with McFarlane Green + Biggar ARCHITECTURE + DESIGN. She is a graduate of the Technical University of Nova Scotia and is in the early years of a storied career with 14 years of project experience including cultural, institutional and school projects - some in the most remote locations of Canada's north. She is a LEED® Accredited Professional with extensive experience designing and detailing community buildings – primarily in wood frame and heavy timber construction. While with mgb, Tracey has managed the construction of the Rennie Gallery and Offices in Vancouver's Chinatown and is currently the project architect for the North Vancouver Civic Centre revitalization and for the interior fit out of the TELUS Garden project.

Benny Neylon

Equilibrium Consulting Inc.

Benny began his structural consulting career in the UK in 2003 with Buro Happold, working on long-span structures including IStructE award-winners the O2 Arena, London and Aviva Stadium, Dublin, before moving to Vancouver via stints in Nigeria and his native Ireland. Benny has worked on a wide range of structural forms, including bridges, leisure and transportation, always with a passion for new ideas and their application to structures.

At Equilibrium, Benny has been heavily involved in the analysis and design of mass timber panel building technology, including the Tall Wood Report (for the BC Wood Coalition) and Elkford Community Centre, BC (the first use of CLT for a commercial building in North America). He is currently working on a number of mass timber projects in Vancouver and northern BC.
